Not illustrated. 1857 Excerpt: . . . provided with instincts for the production of its species. If the insect is a parasite on two plants, it is not at a loss to discover one of them; but deprive it of one of these plants. , and the result is that the remaining one suffers doubly. It is astonishing to witness the manoeuvres of these minute animals to sustain nature. Every type of creation is destined to pass through its course of life; and we find, as one species becomes extinct, another hitherto unknown to us, springs up, as if by magic, in some other part of the globe, to fill up the vacancy. Of this wheat parasite I shall make some further remarks. It is not known at present; and until we do enquire into its origin and habits, much cannot be said of it. ARTICLE VII. --On the Natural History of...
